DAHLIA CULTURE

Space will not permit us to go over every detail in regard to soil. The fellow that tries this is taking quite a thing on his hands. Grow Dahlias where you would grow a good garden, this is all we have to offer.

DAHLIA STORAGE—This seems to be the big elephant on the hands of most growers. We suggest as follows, read carefully. Dig today and store today, not tomorrow. Do not allow to wilt under no consideration. As you dig, do not break necks, trim off all suckers and cut off the stalk as close as possible. Every inch of stalk is an inch of trouble. Avoid stem rot in this manner, store in barrels or boxes or large metal containers you can find at most any city dump. Cover all roots with peat moss, saw-dust or other material but our best suggestion is this, use old newspapers; wad these up and pack in just as snug as possible using all you possibly can. If you are a Flower Grower Reader, check this in their November issue. NOTE—The more parafine paper you can use the better. Such as bread wrappers, etc. Pack plenty snugly on top of the container or better still use Vermiculite.

ROOTED CUTTINGS—Plant in pots as soon as received from us. Not heavy soil and use no fertilizer to burn the tender roots. Grow as long as you can in a cold frame to harden off the same as you would any plant, such as tomatoes, etc., that you would secure from the greenhouse.

FILL YOUR GROWING NEEDS WITH PLANT BANDS

Save valuable benching time, and avoid costly checks from root disturbance in planting. Hundreds of Carnation growers use Plant Bands every year with profitable results. Order yours now and be ready for your first cuttings. We can ship immediately. You'll find them equally valuable for Mums, Bedding Plants and Vegetable Plants.

Bands are made of decay-resisting wood veneer double-stapled with galvanized wire. Aeration and drainage of these bands are important points. Saves time and labor. Bands are removed without cutting; therefore, the dirt ball and roots are not disturbed.

Plant bands are designed to grow your plants inside while danger of frost is outside. Bands fit standard size flats. Roots are not disturbed when transplanted out in open from bands, thus no shock or setback to plant.
